Research Activities

Research Projects

1 The Computerization of Economics

Francesco Sergi, Pierrick Dechaux, and I have started an international project on the role of computerization in the recent history of economics. Computerization refers to the increasing role of technologies (hardware and software) in economic research. The project takes the form of (1) an international conference in Spring 2022 and a special issue in Æconomia, edited with Marcel Boumans; and (2) an online oral history collection ("Oral Histories: the Computerisation of Economics," with Francesco Sergi, Pierrick Dechaux, Dorian Jullien, Thomas Delcey, and Romain Plassard). The project is funded by the New Initiatives Fund of the History of Economics Society.

2 A History of Labor Economics

The project's objective is to write a history of labor economics as a field since the 1970s. The main challenge is to describe the rise of applied microeconomics as a unified methodological endeavour into different sub-fields (e.g. education, health, transport) and the specificity of labor. The project is to work on the relations between theories of wage determination and the economic history of wages. It is built around a conference and a collective publication on the history of labor economics, edited with Jeff Biddle.

3 Experts in Challenging Times, Algeria 1962-1967

This project focuses on the the history of economic expertise in the immediate post-independence of Algeria. It aims at describing the type of economic ideas that were entrenched into the fast-changing practice of policy – from the independence in 1962, the following agrarian reform, and the military coup in 1965. The project is its early stages of conceptualisation.
